Date: December 12, 2017 - Please complete registration below

Speaker: Charles McNeill, DDS, Professor Emeritus & Director, UCSF, Center for Orofacial Pain

Topic: Chronic Pain: Is the Pain in the Brain?

Course Description: To properly differentiate and diagnose orofacial pain disorders, the health provider must have an understanding of the various head, face, jaw and neck pain disorders and their diagnostic criteria. Many conditions masquerade as orofacial pain including tooth pain, therefore, health care providers must consider diseases unrelated to the masticatory system in their differential diagnostic process. Chronic (persistent) pain conditions involving alterations in the peripheral and central nervous systems & emotional centers often with associated comorbid conditions need to be recognized as required risk management for both the patient and the clinician. A thorough diagnostic process is critical, because an incorrect or omitted diagnosis is one of the most frequent causes of treatment failure.

Dr. Charles McNeill is a Professor Emeritus and the Director of the Center for Orofacial Pain at the University of California, San Francisco. He is a Diplomate of the American Board of Orofacial Pain and a Fellow of the American College of Dentists and the International College of Dentists. Dr. McNeill is a member of the OKU Dental Honor Society and is an Honorary member of the American Academy of Oral Medicine. He is a member and former President of both the American Academy of Restorative Dentistry and American Academy of Orofacial Pain and is a past-editor of the Journal of Orofacial Pain. He has authored many articles, abstracts and book chapters, edited four books and lectured extensively on the subjects of TMD, orofacial pain and occlusion.
