Topic Modern Perioperative Pain Management In Dentistry

Management of orofacial pain requires careful, scientific evaluation and diagnosis of each patient. Use of standardized assessment tools and accepted diagnostic terms provides accuracy in diagnosis. Correct diagnosis permits coordination of a management program that may incorporate medication and nerve block therapy to inactivate the involved nociceptive pathways. With the multitude of management options currently available, the practitioner must use caution to see that the patient's therapy is as conservative as possible.
